The Grant and Johnson correspondence has an important significance. It exhibits:

1. The President of the United States engaged in a discussion of a question of veracity, with the General of the Army, in which controversy he has a falsehood fastened upon him. Considering the rank of each President, as the Chief Executive of the American Union, his having a controversy, official or personal, with a subordinate officer, is sufficiently humiliating, without the additional disgrace which attaches to him from the merits of the case.

2. It exhibits the President of the United States canvassing his Cabinet officers to be endorsed as an interpreter between himself and a subordinate, and then requiring them to testify as witnesses upon a question of veracity between himself and that subordinate.

3. It exhibits Andrew Johnson, President of the United States, seeking the reporters of the various newspapers andditorial them to publish statements upon his authority impeaching the personal, official and political character of a subordinate officer; and then having those statements, when repeated personally, branded as untruthful by the officer accused.

4. It exhibits Andrew Johnson appointing the Commander of the Army to the office of Secretary of War, for the purpose of destroying him in the confidence and esteem of the country. It demonstrates that Johnson made the appointment and thereby used his official position to compel Grant to violate the Tenure of Office Law—all for the purpose of bringing the General into conflict with Congress and the loyal sentiment of the country.

A having failed in this, Grant into this extraordinary and revolting position, the correspondence shows a deliberate purpose to represent Grant as having falsely promised to adopt that course, and with having falsely denied that he had done so.

A more miserable exhibition of official turpitude and littleness is not to be found in the history of the United States. The attempt to destroy Grant is so patent, so malicious and disreputable, that it is without precedent in the cogdalrk of political campaigns. The attempt of a candidate for the Presidency to use his official position to involve a possible political rival in official violation of law and personal dishonor, and, failing in that attempt, to charge him with conduct discreditable to him as a soldier and a citizen, is, as we have said, without precedent. Let Andrew Johnson have the sanction of every man who preferred him in the following passages of Grant's letter:

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your communication of the 31st ult., in answer to mine of the 30th ult. After a careful examination of your statement of the conversation had between us on the 12th inst., and of the testimony of the 30th ult., and the records of the business of the Cabinet meetings, I find nearly all the statements of fact therein contained to be substantially correct, and others I remember the correctness of the statements of fact in your communication, in regard to

The Great Museum Hospital for Illegitimate Children.

New York Correspondence of the Cincinnati

About a year ago I had the opportunity of making the acquaintance of the Foundling Hospital of Moscow, the greatest, I believe, in the world. It is an enormous establishment, in the heart of the city, and is the object of pride and pity to all who may choose to visit or patronize it. The number of children received is so large that no less than six miles of rooms and halls in the building are required to accommodate the industrial institute attached to it. One of the wings contains a lying in hospital, with about twenty beds open for the reception of those to go there. About 12,000 children are born there annually, and the mothers, if delivered openly in a room set apart for the purpose, receive thirty five roubles at the end of my visit, and the number sometimes exceeded forty. The only question asked is, Has the child been baptized? If the answer is in the affirmative, the Christian name is immediately entered in the books, bearing a number is then hung around its neck, and a receipt is given to the mother or to the mother or person who leaves the child. By means of the receipt the child can be recovered at any time before it is ten years of age.

The infant, after being dressed in the clothes of the hospital, is handed to its foster mother, and is then sent somewhere to keep it in existence charge. The nurses are usually from the country, and frequently have children of their own, for the hospital before aspiring for situations. The children remain with them till they leave their children to the care of friends and relations, or, if they have none, to

The case will be heard on the 15th inst. Confession of the prisoners on Saturday next will be required, unless sufficient evidence comes to light looked for by the authorities.

FEMALE HOSTILITY.—An incredible means of defence on the part of female prisoners was resorted to by one Bridget Johnson, in that of using the handcuffs. They, too, some members of the Police force have found to be a terrible relief of their antagonists' when circumstances give them opportunity. On the night of the 31st ult., Johnson Hendrickson was yesterday arraigned before Justice Morrison, charged with assaulting Officer McConnell. She was fined $5, and held to still assault. Another woman, Mary Hendrickson, with Mary McGreevy by name, was admitted to $500 bail for future appearance.

The latter seized the cleaver, and Alexander was arrested and brought before Justice Morrison, charged with assault and battery. He was fined $10, and held to still assault. Alexander was unable to procure bail, and was committed to jail.

A STARTLING MYSTERY.

The Lifeless Body of an Apprentice Found in a Bindery Room.

Was Death the Result of an Accident, Suicide, or the Work of an Assassin?

The Boy's Heart Perforated by a Pistol Ball, but the Weapon Not to be Found.

Work for the Detectives—Who Will Solve the Mystery?

A mysterious tragedy was enacted in the city yesterday, the most mysterious, perhaps, that has ever come under the notice of our police, and the circumstances under which death was produced in this instance, bid fair to remain forever a secret. While this is being written, the lifeless body of Charles Gordon, a lad of fifteen, lies cold in death, in the establishment of Adam, Rockner & Lyon, publishers, No. 115 Randolph street. A bullet hole immediately over the heart tells but too plainly how death was produced, but even a single cue regarding the perpetration of the deed can be discovered. Scores of curious people visited the locality during yesterday afternoon, and a number of detectives worked diligently to ferret out the mystery, but failed to unravel in this tragedy, which only increases in mystery as the investigation progresses. Whether it was a fiendish plausible theory can be formed to explain the circumstances attending death to suicide, accident and murder. Either one of these theories can be entertained, but the real one as another, death is the final result. The following facts have been gathered in the course of the investigation, and all that is yet known, concerning the matter:

The boy, Charles Gordon, was employed as an apprentice in the bindery connected with the publishing house of Adams, Rockner & Lyon, and had been at work on the fourth floor. He was engaged in folding sheets, and was in the habit of working at a table in the rear room on the floor mentioned, where he was alone most of the time. The engine was intelligent, but the screen and much loosened from contact with the floor. The boy was in the habit of working at this table, and on the day in question he was at his usual place, and was engaged in folding sheets. He was alone, and no one was in the room, with the exception of Mr. Rockner, who was in the front office. The closet room, but one removed from the packing room, and one of the doors of the packing room, but one removed from the packing room, and one of the doors of the closet room, but one removed from the packing room, and one of the doors of the closet room, but one removed from the packing room, and one of the doors of the closet
